
west wildlife preserve 300 Hours Of Community Service Placing More Water Jugs In The Desert?

Posted by climber - 2010/02/09 01:18

Dec. 22, 2009 10:32 AM Associated Press GREEN VALLEY - A border activist has decided he would rather comply with an order to complete 300 hours of community service than go to jail. Walt Staton had vowed not to comply with his sentence for leaving water jugs on a southern Arizona wildlife preserve last year. The area is a popular route for illegal immigrants entering the U.S., and many have died from lack of water while crossing the desert. The 28-year-old Tucson resident has one year to complete the hours. Staton was convicted of littering in June after being cited in December 2008 by a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service agent for leaving water jugs in the Buenos Aires National Wildlife Refuge west of Arivaca. U.S. Magistrate Judge Jennifer Guerin gave Staton until Monday's hearing to reconsider his decision or face 25 days in jail. Encouraging and aiding illegal alien invaders should carry at least a five year jail term. climber <http://www.americanworker.org/> American Worker

=====

west wildlife preserve 300 Hours Of Community Service Placing More Water Jugs In The Desert?

Posted by Stormin Mormon - 2010/02/09 01:18

Careful! That would imprison most of Congress and Senate, who are busy giving away tax payer dollars to illegals.

=====

west wildlife preserve 300 Hours Of Community Service Placing More Water Jugs In The Desert?

Posted by Stormin Mormon - 2010/02/09 01:18

Dec. 22, 2009 10:32 AM Associated Press GREEN VALLEY - A border activist has decided he would rather comply with an order to complete 300 hours of community service than go to jail. Walt Staton had vowed not to comply with his sentence for leaving water jugs on a southern Arizona wildlife preserve last year. The area is a popular route for illegal immigrants entering the U.S., and many have died from lack of water while crossing the desert. The 28-year-old Tucson resident has one year to complete the hours. Staton was convicted of littering in June after being cited in December 2008 by a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service agent for leaving water jugs in the Buenos Aires National Wildlife Refuge west of Arivaca. U.S. Magistrate Judge Jennifer Guerin gave Staton until Monday's hearing to reconsider his decision or face 25 days in jail.

=====